

The Council for Aboriginal Reconciliation has established a network of people across the country to work for reconciliation. The people help communities.

Reconciliation is about building better relationships between Aboriginal people and Torres Strait Islander people and other Australians. It is about understanding the past, so that we can move together into the future as both friends and equals. Members of the Australian community work on a voluntary basis with the Council.

They promote reconciliation through:

- the community at fetes, conferences, exhibitions and gatherings
- local councils, by such actions as flying the Aboriginal flag and the Torres Strait Islander flag
- schools
- families, friends and people they work with.

The coordinators and community helpers provide reconciliation information such as posters, brochures and comics. They help people to find out about Aboriginal history or Torres Strait Islander history of the area. They also help other people to become aware of the problems of reconciliation and work out how everyone can undertake positive actions towards reconciliation.
